

Suggested points for letter to MP

NHS charging should be immediately abolished due to the adverse impact on individual and public health, the lack of cost-effectiveness of the charges and the negative impact of 'hostile environment' policies on vulnerable immigrants and on society.

- Introduction of NHS charges in England for those with no leave to remain in the UK in 2015, and expansion of these in 2017 with a requirement on NHS trusts to check eligibility, has resulted in denial of essential healthcare and deterrence from seeking healthcare.

This has resulted in maternal and perinatal deaths and many other preventable deaths.

It is of detriment to public health and has undermined trust between staff and patients.

In December 2018 four medical royal colleges called for these regulations to be scrapped and for an independent review.

- Charges for NHS healthcare are confusing and complex for staff and patients and not cost-effective as they take time to administer, cannot be afforded by most of those charged and result in worse health outcomes.

Over four-fifths of charges have not been reclaimed as those most likely to be charged are those least able to pay.

Many of these affected have been resident in the UK for years but unable to regularise their immigration status for various reasons including cost and lack of legal support.

Provision of free access to timely healthcare including for those with insecure immigration status is more cost-effective than forcing these people to turn to emergency care or to allow their condition to worsen.

- It has been seen from the Windrush scandal that policies, including healthcare charging, designed to create a hostile environment for foreigners without indefinite leave to remain or lacking documentation, cause injustice and avoidable suffering.

Lessons should be learned and applied from this episode particularly in relation to mindless bureaucracy, poor governance, failure to heed warnings and discrimination.

A culture of disbelief, denial, ignorance and indifference impoverishes society.

Judeo-Christian ethics which have been the foundation of UK legislation require justice and compassion towards vulnerable foreigners who do not have the full rights of a citizen.

For society to flourish, policy and practice should focus on equity, empowerment and integration.
